"I do not have it within my capacity to make those of you who are ill well.

But together we can start to make the world well. And at the end of the day, that is one of the primary reasons why we're here"

1956-1992

I met Jon Gates in Sydney, Nova Scotia, in the Spring of 1987. He had travelled from Vancouver, and I from Thunder Bay, to participate in a Popular Theatre Festival. On the final day of the festival, he was enrolled in a workshop I led about community animation.

In the introductory go-around during that workshop, Jon described himself as living within a community where many of his friends were dying.

Later that summer, I visited him in Vancouver and we established a friendship that lasted over the ensuing years.

When he moved to Ottawa and began his work as the coordinator for the Interagency Coalition on AIDS and Development, Canadian Council for International Cooperation, he moved into community animation on a vastly different scale.

Last Spring, he delivered the keynote address in Halifax at the Canadian AIDS Society Annual General Meeting. The brief quote above is from the culmination of his address. We printed the full text in the last issue of our newsletter. If you missed it, please call us. If you have that copy, read it again.

I don't know anyone who lived with AIDS and understood what AIDS means in a global context, better than Jon. He used his brilliant wit and ability to cut the bullshit to articulate what AIDS means in the world. There are those of us who think of our own cities as "the world" and about the world around us only on "World AIDS Day".

I saw Jon in Ottawa General Hospital three days before he died. David Hoe and I visited him together. In the presence of his final, heroic struggle with the disease, Jon reminisced and laughed with us. The conversation was difficult, painful, indelible.

Jon spent his life, literally, urging us to think globally about AIDS. Like the many wise men and women who have led us in this work, he prodded us to look inside ourselves for the first decisions about how AIDS affects our lives. But he challenged us further. He challenged us to take those decisions and make them larger than ourselves. Corny - romantic - old rhetoric - maybe even silly? Yes, all of those things. Also necessary and practical.

There is so much work to be done. Caught up in my day to day work, I haven't yet found a way to take up Jon's extended challenge. But it hasn't gone away. It rings in my ears.

I want Jon back to continue action on this front. His vision and his passion are sorely missed. How will we take up his challenge?

TED'S TABLE

As I sit at Meghan's desk, I am trying to compose this article for the January edition of the reACT-Believe. The weather is blustery outside, but after all, it is the day of the Winter Solstice.

I am in my second term as a board member of ACT-B and I would like to thank all the members who re-elected me at the Annual General Meeting in November. My position on the board is a Person Having AIDS (aka: PHA) representative for the agency. The experience I have gained over the past year has been like none I have ever experienced before. I have participated in the board, the management and the decision making of the agency.

For the past year I have attended several meetings for the Ontario AIDS Network and the Canadian AIDS Society. Meeting sites were in various centres across the province. The furthest I travelled was Halifax, Nova Scotia. This year's AGM for the Canadian AIDS Society will be held in Montreal. I am hoping that my health will permit me to continue going to these meetings.

When attending these meetings, you meet hundreds of Persons Living With HIV/AIDS. You hear different stories about the barriers they have crossed while living with this devastating virus.

I began to make some new friendships with many of these people. One person who comes to mind was a friend from Kingston, Ontario. His name was Tom. We went out for coffee while attending meetings and also met at our hotels for get-togethers. Sad to say Tom passed away November 24, 1992. He will always be remembered by the PHA Caucus for his strength and courage while dealing with AIDS.

At the end of our CAS meetings, we as a group always acknowledge our losses and we try mentioning names of those who have passed on. Every name mentioned is one too many. It is very sad to say why and how it has to be this way. WHY?

I am going to end off the article by wishing everyone the very best of the New Year. Special thanks to the agency for all the things that they have done for me since my diagnosis.

GOD BLESS YOU ALL!
Ted Romanowski

HELLO FROM DARYLE!

Hello everyone! My name is Daryle Dollan and I am the new Support Services Coordinator at Act-B. I started here September 8, 1992, taking over for Glenna McLeod, who has returned to University to complete her Master's Degree.

The last three-plus months have been very busy ones. AIDS Awareness Week (with the quilt being the highlight of a very busy week), the Counselling Conference, the holiday season and a rapidly growing caseload have contributed to making these first three months very full (and somewhat chaotic).

Hopefully, now that the holiday season has passed, I can get to work on some issues and activities that have been on the back burner for a while, such as a buddy system and a support group that will more aptly meet the needs of those who will be utilizing it. I welcome your comments, assistance and/or input on either of these topics.

I hope the next three months will be productive ones! If you have any comments or concerns, please do not hesitate to give me a call and discuss them. Take care!

ANONYMOUS TESTING IS AVAILABLE IN THUNDER BAY: PHONE 625-5981

You can now find out your individual health status concerning HIV. Anonymous HIV testing is now available in Thunder Bay.

The process is simple. All you have to do is phone 625-5981 to set up an appointment. During this initial phone call, you will be asked for a first name in order to book an appointment. No other identifying information will be asked for.

At the appointment, you will receive information to explain just what the test means. During your appointment, you will receive appropriate counselling relevant to your own personal needs. A blood sample will be taken and you will be given a date and time to return for your test results. It may take 3 weeks before results are ready.

If you have any questions about anonymous testing, please call us at ACT-B: 345-1516.

Accurate, candid and up-to-date information coupled with sensitive pre- and post- test counselling is what you should receive if you choose to be tested. We're here to help assure you receive that.

AIDS AND CANADIAN LAW

Written by Lorne E. Rozovsky and Fay A. Rozovsky

Published by Butterworths Canada Ltd.
Copyright 1992

Just over two years ago, I was preparing material for a presentation to a law class at Lakehead University. As I did not want to make my talk a usual "AIDS 101" presentation, I began to look for material on AIDS and the law. There was next to nothing available in any comprehensive form. The odd book that had published in this area was American and thus "odd" is an apt description. Canadian law is very different, relevant to HIV/AIDS. I scrambled from my personal knowledge of legal cases that had resulted in newspaper stories. Securing those clippings and weaving the material into some accessible information was a daunting task.

Lorne and Fay Rozovsky's new book goes a long distance toward providing basic legal context re: HIV/AIDS. It does it expressly in relation to Canadian Law. It does it in a very readable, accessible style.

The book covers a comprehensive list of related legal issues. This is an excellent overview of how far reaching AIDS is. It touches almost all aspects of Canadian society. Because of this comprehensive approach [read the chapter headings to gain a quick overview], this is not a sit down quick read. Rather, it requires casual but regular attention. In this manner, it serves its purpose as a typical reference manual.

There are some weaknesses in the book. Because of the comprehensive listing of issues, many of them are treated in simple, rudimentary ways. This, of course, is not completely the fault of the authors as many of the provinces have different laws relating to the same issues. It would have required perhaps ten volumes to go into depth about the specific and different legislation in various constituencies.

Secondly, many of the chapters [though not all] finish with a section called "Conclusion". Here the authors state their own opinion about the factual material they printed in the preceding chapter. I found myself profoundly disagreeing with their "conclusions" a number of times. My strongest reaction was where they state that "the fear of criminal sanctions against bona fide educational efforts in the control of AIDS is largely exaggerated." Federal censors have been seizing books and other print materials from Canadian gay and lesbian bookstores for decades. It doesn't matter if the material has AIDS education or health promotion value. If there is written or visual depiction of anal intercourse, the material is considered "obscene" by the Feds.

Lastly, a book of this nature will, of necessity, go out of date as laws change. This again is through no fault of the authors. A recent example is Ontario's new legislation making "living wills" legal. The authors do print an example of what a "living will" should contain.

Putting aside the limitations to the volume and differences of opinion with the authors subjective conclusions, this is a practical and useful book. It can be the centre of any legal resource section about AIDS. It contains an extensive listing of other print resources - though there are only two Canadian papers cited - and a simple listing of other Canadian sources of HIV/AIDS information.

This slim but timely volume is a welcome addition to any HIV/AIDS resource library.

Canadian Human Rights Commission

Justice Minister Kim Campbell has proposed amendments to the Canadian Human Rights Act which she states will give gays and lesbians more protection from discrimination.

Campbell tabled legislation in early December which prescribes that discrimination based on sexual orientation would be included in the Act as a "prohibited ground of discrimination."

The changes have been introduced as a result of an Ontario Court of Appeal ruling in August 1992.

In that case, two gay men - Graham Haig and Joshua Birch - contended that the Human Rights Act did not adequately protect them from discrimination in federal agencies.

In 1990, Birch - a captain in the Canadian Armed Forces - left a five-year career in the military because he had no further chance of advancement when his commanding officer learned he was gay.

Because of military policy, Birch was told he would be ineligible for promotions, postings and further military career training.

Campbell's amendments would give individuals the right to use the Canadian Human Rights Commission to file complaints of discrimination within one year of the alleged incident.

She has also proposed that the Act include marital status as a prohibited ground of discrimination. But the definition of marital status - described as a union between a man and woman - has drawn some criticism from homosexuals because it excludes same-sex relationships.

"I don't know of a jurisdiction in the world that recognizes same-sex marriage," Campbell said in an interview with the Parliamentary Bureau. (Education Note: Denmark recognizes same-sex marriages) "This is not to say same-sex relationships are not recognized for certain public-policy purposes and that is an area in which there has been some change over the last months in Canada, and will still be a matter before the courts."

If the proposals are passed as law, homosexual couples are concerned they will not be eligible for the same employment benefits, health care, pension and tax advantages as opposite-sex couples.

"I think it's important to make clear that claims for benefits by same-sex couples have not been based on marital status," Campbell said.

"They have been based, generally speaking, on the definition of spouse and who is entitled to spousal benefits... The act itself will remain silent on those definitions."

Campbell claims the proposals offer homosexuals more rights and greater equality, although gay activists have asserted the proposed legislation is another form of discrimination. She explained that the rights of same-sex couples will ultimately be decided by the courts on a case-by-case basis.

For the next while, the courts will be kept busy breaking new ground in the fight for gay and lesbian rights.

Brian Mossop, a federal civil servant who was denied a one-day leave from work to attend a funeral for his gay partner's father, has brought his case to the Supreme Court of Canada. A ruling is expected soon on gay couples' rights to family benefits.

An Ontario court will be deciding whether a gay couple will be allowed to legally marry. The couple - Pierre Beaulne and Todd Layland - argue that the legal definition of marriage is discriminatory.

Regardless of the fight for gay and lesbian rights, Campbell's proposed legislation may not even become law.

MP's won't have the chance to consider the proposals until they return to the house of Commons in February. And, at least 20 Tory MP's who oppose Campbell's changes are calling for a free vote on the issue.

There is also a chance that the legislation will be killed if the House is prorogued.

Campbell assured that the amendments will be introduced in the new Parliament even if the current session ends before the proposals are reviewed.

TO ALL OF US WHO ARE EFFECTED/AFFECTED WITH HIV/AIDS

Our support group is becoming extinct and we can't figure out why. Some people say that it's because of the location of the meetings. Some say "I don't have anything to say, except ..." Many don't say anything at all. There are people affected by this virus who can benefit from your experience. They need your help. The only person able to help a person living with HIV/AIDS is one who also has HIV/AIDS.

Your experiences could help someone else, so come on out to where the coffee is free and talk is good!

Sincerely,
Ernie and Joyce

RAMBLINGS OF AN AIDS EDUCATOR

As we enter 1993, I reflect on the fact that I've been involved in this work for seven years; five years as volunteer and board member and the last two as ACT-B Education Coordinator. In the last two years, a number of projects have been accomplished. AIDS Awareness Week has improved our profile in the community, especially with the display of the Canadian AIDS Quilt last fall. The Native AIDS Project provided some understanding of need for work by First Nations communities.

Publishing efforts included "Taking Care: A Guide For Caregivers", "Getting Together" the poster and pamphlet aimed at youth, the completion of "Keewaywin", the video and guide aimed at First Nations communities. Regional outreach tours and advertising have maintained a presence throughout Northwestern Ontario. Community channel television shows, the information phonenumber and ongoing presentations, workshops and displays have helped to keep information flowing into the community. Library reorganization has made our resource collection more accessible. This work has been exciting and challenging and I feel good about doing it.

One of the things that has become increasingly clear, however, is that there simply is not enough time, money or staff to do all that needs to be done. There is a very evident need to focus our education efforts very specifically in order to achieve maximum results with a minimum of people and money. The question that arises, of course, is how do we go about this?

As we enter 1993 (the eighth year of service for ACT-B) there is a lot of conflicting speculation about where the AIDS epidemic is headed. Some researchers say that heterosexuals are not at risk, but at the same time we are seeing many of our new clients coming from that population. While there are suggestions that the rate of HIV infection is dropping in Canada, it is now reported that the number of AIDS cases has been significantly under reported. Meanwhile, the epidemic is raging out of control in many parts of the world.

Consider the following. A large majority of those infected with HIV in Canada are gay and bisexual men, but there are an increasing number of women who are becoming infected. Injection drug use, although accounting for a small percentage of cases, is of growing concern. Studies are showing that, gay and bisexual men have made major changes in sexual behaviour, but there are significant numbers, especially among the younger men, who engage in high-risk sexual activities. They are like the rest of the teen population who continue to act as though they are invulnerable to sexual disease.

How can we address all of these issues? What are the implications for our education and prevention programs?

In Thunder Bay, we are in the process of a major evaluation of our education and prevention efforts, with one aspect being a needs assessment survey. We are determined over the next few months, to look at what we have accomplished and plot our course for the next two or three years.

You can help us out in the process of evaluation and focusing. Write us and let us know what you think our priorities for the next two or three years should be and why.

THE FALL IS PART OF THE DANCE

Ernie's six-year-old daughter knows her dad is very ill. After viewing the Canadian AIDS Quilt in Thunder Bay last October, she began designing a quilt panel for her father.

"She took a piece of material and sewed some string on to it in the shape of a heart. . . It's really cute," Ernie boasted.

"So I put it away. If the time ever arises that I need a spare piece for my panel, we'll have it."

Ernie, a Thunder Bay resident in his late twenties, has been living with HIV for two years.

Although he's full of fun and energy, he knows that one day he may succumb to AIDS.

He already started working on his quilt panel to ensure that his life is remembered along with those whose names already appear on the quilt's 400 panels.

At times, the HIV causes tingling and numbness in his hands, feet and arms -- a common symptom called neuropathy -- but he's not allowing it to affect his emotional well-being.

"I still haven't broken down like a lot of people do," he said. "I have HIV and there's nothing I can do about it. . . (so) I may as well look at everything positively."

His effervescent personality helps Ernie, his wife and six daughters cope with his HIV even though the threat of AIDS is no stranger to his family. His cousin died of AIDS-related illnesses last Christmas.

Ernie unexpectedly found a quilt panel made for his cousin while helping ACT-B roll out the panels for the quilt display in Thunder Bay.

"The panel was just a rainbow with his name on it and his lover's name -- nothing fancy. He was just a plain person," he said.

"I'd like to have a real fancy panel but that's not me."

Ernie wants a clown and teddy bear embedded on his quilt piece because "that's what I am", he said jokingly, and because he's an avid collector of both items.

"All the girls in my family know me well. I know they'll come up with something grand for me."

Unlike Ernie, 34-year-old Ted isn't sure about how he'll be commemorated on his quilt panel. The only thing important to him is that his name be included on the national tapestry.

"With me being so young, (having a panel on the quilt) is one of the goals I want to achieve before my number is up," he explained.

"I would like to have three or four other people volunteering to sit down (with me) and compose a quilt. Or, when I'm gone, they can put whatever they want on it."

Ted has been living with AIDS for over a year now. He found out about his HIV while living in Florida. When he was diagnosed with AIDS, he came back to Thunder Bay for the support of his family and friends.

Ted's parents found the news difficult to accept, but his sister took action. She set up a support meeting for Ted at ACT-B.

"When I came back to town, I was so emotionally weak that I couldn't even talk over the phone to ask for information about AIDS. But, everything has worked out positively for me," he said.

Since returning to Thunder Bay, Ted's health has stabilized, he's receiving a steady income, has found a place to live and is getting the emotional support he needs from his loved ones and ACT-B.

And he's also lending his support. Even though AIDS sometimes drains him of energy, Ted always musters up enough to volunteer with the agency.

He fills in at the reception desk, participates in fundraising activities and helps organize special events. He is also a member of the board of directors.

But it was the AIDS quilt presentation that provided him with the most significant volunteer experience of all. It played an integral part in helping him come to terms with the disease and its wrath.

"I had lost some friends (who died of AIDS) and fortunately, their panels were on the quilt. . . For me, (the quilt presentation) was like a funeral."

To Ted's surprise, the remorse and anguish he experienced while viewing the quilt and acknowledging the lives of those who had died of AIDS was also shared by some of the 1,600 people who came out to look at the artwork.

"I couldn't believe the respect that was shown," he said.

"There were complete strangers who didn't know the people who had died of AIDS, and they cried (for the victims). I didn't expect that kind of empathy."

Sometimes he finds it difficult to accept that a panel may one day be attached to the quilt in his memory, but Ted knows the quilt is an important tool for raising public awareness about AIDS and for keeping the memories of those who died of AIDS alive.

"The quilt means I will be remembered by the community, by the people that I knew. . . It's an everlasting recognition."

After weeks of planning and organizing to bring it to Thunder Bay and only four days after its arrival, the quilt panels were rolled back up and sent off to their next destination.

"I'm sad about it leaving," Ernie said. "Because, everytime it keeps going (to another location) another piece is added on."

Several weeks have passed since its stop-over in the city. But for Ernie, Ted, the ACT-B staff and many of those people who took the opportunity to view it, the quilt and the spirits embedded in it have not been forgotten.

"I remember all those colours. They were so vivid," Ted mused.

"And, I especially remember one panel with the saying 'The fall is part of the dance.' For me, those few words mean so much."

NORTHWESTERN ONTARIO REGIONAL HIV/AIDS COUNSELLING CONFERENCE

UPDATE

In the fall of 1992, the AIDS Committee of Thunder Bay held its first Northwestern Ontario Regional HIV/AIDS Counselling Conference here in Thunder Bay at the new Ontario government building. The one and a half day event was made possible through funding from the Ontario Ministry of Health.

The conference was guided by a planning committee made up of volunteers and staff. Persons living with HIV/AIDS also contributed to the planning, participated as speakers and attended as general registrants. Thanks again go out to the planning committee members: from Thunder Bay, Russell Angus, Vivian Johnston, Paul Johnston, Michael Sobota, Glenna McLeod, Meghan Carroll, Karen Ferland and from Kenora, Rai Therrian.

Twenty speakers and approximately 46 health care workers from the Northwestern Ontario communities of Sioux Lookout, Dryden, Kenora, Rainy River/Fort Frances, Marathon, Nipigon/Red Rock, Atikokan and Thunder Bay attended the conference. Speakers from Toronto and Winnipeg also attended.

Speakers gave presentations describing their own particular experiences dealing with HIV/AIDS and counselling issues. The talks reflected professional and personal views. At the end of each presentation there was a period when those attending the conference could interact with the speakers and have their concerns addressed. A lot of information was acquired through this process. Many previously unanswered questions were clarified and many new questions arose.

Counsellors, social workers, clergymen, nurses, doctors, persons living with HIV/AIDS, partners of persons living with HIV/AIDS and other health care professionals participated in the conference. Although there were many concerns that still needed to be addressed, the conference itself was considered to be a great success.

It was unanimous among those who attended that the conference should take place on an annual basis to help health care professionals receive accurate and updated information on the many issues relating to HIV/AIDS counselling.

BRING ON THE SPRING THING!

The AIDS Committee of Thunder Bay will be hosting another:

HEALTHY SEX CABARET
