OFFICIAL OPENING

OF THE

LAKEHEAD UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

THURSDAY, OCT. 27, 1966

AD·AUGUSTA·PER·ANGUSTA

The $1,500,000 library building is an impressive addition to the Lakehead University campus. Designed by Lakehead architects Mickelson Fraser and Browne, it is completely air-conditioned and features many of the latest library design techniques. The library presently contains more than 50,000 volumes including a number of rare collections. It has an eventual capacity of 170,000 volumes.

The University today is also officially opening the new $900,000 academic wing to the main quadrangle and the $400,000 64-bed addition to the residence, both completed this summer. The residence addition includes accommodation for a girls wing. There are presently 30 girls in residence from many different parts of the globe. The new academic wing houses impressive new science laboratories and faculty offices.

Six classrooms on the first floor of the library have been hooked up to the university's new closed circuit television teaching system operating from the university's own studio right on campus. A modern language lab with 40 individual listening booths connected to a main teaching control board is also located on the first floor.
