A Northern Solution

Improving the Health of Northern Ontario

As an outstanding international centre of excellence, the Northern Ontario School of Medicine is drawing talented staff, faculty and students from Northern Ontario and around the world. That means a promising future for a healthy Northern Ontario.

Improved Health Care for You

Students who train in the North are more likely to live and work in the North. Students of the School will learn in a variety of communities throughout the North.

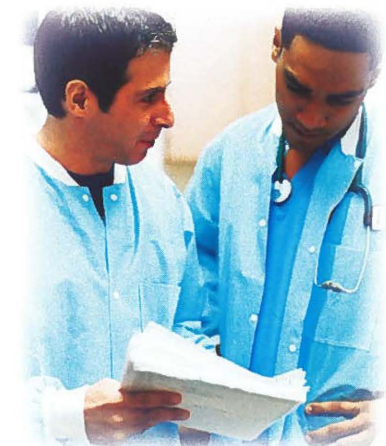

The Northern Ontario School of Medicine's students will learn and work alongside other health care professionals such as nurse practitioners, physical therapists and traditional healers. This encourages an interdisciplinary team approach to health-care.

Local research of Northern health issues will be enhanced by the School's research scientists, recruited from across the globe.

More doctors in the North

Students of the Northern Ontario School of Medicine are those most likely to thrive as medical practitioners in rural, remote and northern urban communities.

Hundreds of physicians and health care practitioners from all disciplines will make up the School's clinical faculty. Some have relocated to the North and will set up new practices in the North.

Leave a Legacy

Be a part of history.

Contribute to the future.

A special Bursary Fund has been established in honour of the Northern Ontario School of Medicine's first students. Gifts made now will benefit classes for years to come. Donations can be made at either campus. Named bursaries, scholarships and awards can be created to honour individuals or groups.

"Students who study in the North will realize all the benefits of practicing medicine in the North. Your support of their goals will secure the future of health care in the region."
